Background information

In accordance with section 6 of Unemployment Security Act (Työttömyysturvalaki) (1290/2002), the basic or earnings-related unemployment allowance is limited to 300-500 days. After this period, job-seekers will receive labour market subsidy.

As a result of changes in the market situation caused by the outbreak of COVID-19, the Parliament has accepted a temporary amendment that cancels the unemployment allowance deductible period in the case of temporary lay-off. In the case of dismissal, the deductible period applies as for usual.

Content of measure

This measure applies to all job-seekers that have been temporarily laid off between 16 March 2020 and 6 June 2020 and meet the criteria for either basic unemployment allowance (earnings-related unemployment allowance).

For those job-seekers that have been temporarily laid-off and who qualify for earnings-related unemployment allowance, this measure has financial significance since it extends the period they can receive earnings-related unemployment allowance in case they are dismissed after the lay-off or in the following months. The average earnings-related unemployment allowance is €65 per workday whereas the basic unemployment allowance and the labour market subsidy are €34 per workday.
