Background information

With new rules and more funds for short-time work, the government is currently trying to keep as many people as possible in their jobs. The Public Employment Service (AMS) head Johannes Kopf still expects "due to the developments" that "in the coming weeks a lot of people - hopefully for only a short time - will have to register as unemployed".

AMS expects an increased number of people to become unemployed during the current pandemic. In order to reduce personal contacts to a minimum, applications for unemployment benefit and emergency assistance can be made without a personal interview from home. This can be done online, or via the electronic system eAMS, or, if online is not possible, via telephone and subsequent mailing of the forms.

Content of measure

Minister of Labour Christine Aschbacher (conservative People's Party ÖVP) has issued a decree stating that people no longer have to come personally to the AMS service centers to apply for unemployment benefits. This should both relieve the AMS and help to limit the spread of the virus.

The preferred way to submit an application is via an "eAMS account", "then a lot of the further communication is done electronically" (AMS head Kopf). Those who do not yet have one can get one through their Finanzonline account or with their Citizen Card. Those who have neither access to Finanzonline nor a citizen card can apply for an electronic AMS account by email or phone. Then, however, the processing can take a few days. If waiting is not an option, unemployed can also register as unemployed using a form on the AMS website. It is also possible to report unemployment by email. The last option is to call the AMS to have the necessary forms sent to you by post.

For those who receive unemployment benefits and the entitlement period would come to an end (thus receiving the lower emergency assistance), the "Corona crisis period" is not calculated towards this entitlement, i.e. unemployment benefits are prolonged for the duration of the crisis.
