Background information

For halting the spread of the Covid-19 virus, government locked down restaurants and hotels, only delivery and pick up services are allowed. The measure has an enormous impact on the employment situation of the sectoral workers.

The food, restaurant and hotel workers union NGG, an affiliate of trade union confederation DGB, negotiated with two employer organisations to address the situation - with very different results. The federal association of hotel and restaurant employers DEHOGA has rejected to negotiate an agreement on short time working at all whereas the federal association of system caterers BdS was willing to conclude a Corona protection agreement with some favourable conditions. The new agreement came on top of a sectoral agreement concluded by NGG and BdS (covering 120,000 workers) agreed in early March which stipulates an wage rise up to 12 Euro per hour until 2021.

Content of measure

The NGG-BdS Corona protection agreement aims at avoiding direct dismissals and at supporting businesses (often franchises) by settling that in case of need

- the employers shall apply for short time working with the federal employment agency

- that they shall raise the standard short time working allowance paid by the federal employment agency (60% of net monthly wage for workers without children, 67% for workers with children) to up to 90% of the net monthly wage
- and that workers shall be covered by dismissal protection until two months after the end of the short time working period.

The agreement covers about 120,000 worker represented by the affiliates of BdS, a.o. McDonalds, Burger King, Starbucks and Pizza Hut.
